Jodi and Jamie, I'd only had the pleasure of meeting your Mom a couple of times. I have a distinct memory of us all out to dinner and one of you spilled your milk. If you can imagine growing up in a house where spilling milk resulted in a ridiculous and unwarranted punishment, you might be able to imagine my delight when your mother picked up another glass of milk and dumped it on the table, then proceeded with another glass of milk ... I took that memory of her with me as I grew up. At 41-years-old and two kids later, there have been many glasses of spilled milk. It is because of your Mom that I meet a glass of spilled milk with another, tipped over, and with as emphatic of a statement, "So what! Who cares!" You indeed have the best mother in the world. She is unforgettable. ~Eve

Now we're only 3 days away from your absence of one year... I am so glad we had that last day together when you were in the hospital. It was just you and me for 10 straight hours, holding hands and giggling. we must have watched a million episodes of overhaulin on TV but I will never forget that we had that day. I always smile knowing that I got you all to myself and you were completely aware of me being there. You didnt want me to go but i had to go to class... God, I love you... The phrase "you don't know what you've got till it's gone" is so true. You were an amazing mom to us when we were little and you tried to keep us protected from everything that was going on... I see that now that I'm grown up. You were dealt a bad hand in life and I'm sorry for that... You deserved better. In my thoughts,Jodi

Only six more days and it will officially be one year since you left us... I was driving in the car the other day and thinking about how you always knew how to make an entrance and an exit. I know sticking around was only hurting you and it was selfish of me to try to keep you in this life just so I wouldn't have to give up my mom, so you made your exit. I've tried to bring you flowers 2 times now and each time I got all the way to you and something got in the way of me leaving something beautiful for you so the people know that the person in here was a wonderful beautiful woman and she was deeply loved by her family... but now it's just an empty plaque with just your name and the dates you stood with us... I'm sorry mom but don't worry I'll keep trying. I love you so much and I miss you every day. I wish I could get one more hug from you... just like the way you used to hug me. You would squeeze me so tight I could feel your body shake. No one has ever and never will hug me like you hugged me. See you sooner, wiggle waggle

Tomorrow is Thanksgiving... it was the last time I saw you alive last year... If I had known it would be our last time to hug I would have never let go. Last year I took you for granted and this year I realize how thankful and lucky I am to have had you as my mom. I miss your smile and your laugh. I still catch myself going to the phone to call you... I'm still so sad mom... It's been almost a year since you've been gone and I still want to protect you. You will always have a safe place, where no one can hurt you in my heart... I'm still not ready to say good bye, so just like when we used to get off the phone and we didn't want to say good bye then, let's just leave it like we used to... "see you sooner" I love you
