I don't know how to say goodbye to the man that has loved me my whole life. I never had to prove myself, never needed to earn your love-it was just there. A steadiness that I needed.I loved our Sunday morning breakfast with French Toast Sticks and the Sunday paper before grandma and Angie got up. I will always want a big orange truck like you had. The one with the horn I could only push the ONE time. I'll miss holding your hand. I remember as far back as I can, swinging back and forth going into the store.Putting on each outfit that grandma bought me and turning so you could say how nice I looked. You taught me that little girls are made of sugar and spice and everything nice, while boys are made of snips and snails and puppy dog tails. Whenever it didn't make sense - it's cats and dogs. The Beach Boys may not have been your favorite, but they always remind me of you. I love that you loved me enough to let me live my own life. Even though me leaving caused heartache. You were there with a "Stephy!" every time I called, wrote, or FaceTimed. You spent time with and knew my kids. You loved my husband and welcomed him into your home even when I wasn't around. I don't know how to live with this hole in my heart. I'm trying to do what you asked, but it's just going to take some time. I love you, Grandpa. I'll watch the mailbox.
